

Blythe Valley Park lands the Birmingham headquarters of national construction, development and services group Kier
Regional contractor Kier Moss has moved from the Maypole in Birmingham to new, larger premises at the Tungsten building at Blythe Valley Park.

The new building has been purchased by Kier's commercial property arm, Kier Property, for occupation by Kier Moss and the Group's social housing division, Kier Partnership Homes.

The fully-glazed building affords over 23,000 sq ft of prime office space on two floors and a 500 sq ft double height atrium.

Kier Moss director Gary Pearce, who heads up the company's Birmingham office, said: "With our increasing presence in Birmingham and the West Midlands, we had outgrown our existing premises.

"Tungsten will provide staff with a modern and flexible working environment that has excellent communications across the West Midlands and easy access to anywhere in the country.

“Sister company Kier Partnership Homes will be occupying the first floor and having this additional space provides the chance to give our local clients easier access to the services of the wider Group.

“Buying our own office at Blythe Valley Park presents an ideal base from which to develop our business in Birmingham and the West Midlands, demonstrating our commitment to the region.”

Paul Rubincam, Director at Liberty Property Trust UK, which develops and manages Blythe Valley Park in partnership with Doughty Hanson & Co Real Estate, added:

“Tungsten is a terrific building in terms of efficiency and image and perfect for a company such as the Kier Group, which is looking to grow its operations in the region.

“It is always pleasing when a company that specialises in construction and development chooses the park as it confirms the quality of what we have to offer.”

Blythe Valley Park covers an area of 257 acres, including a dedicated countryside park, and is home to companies and organisations such as Arup, Oracle, British Gas, Caterpillar Finance, Balfour Beatty and Virgin Active.
